DODGING THE DENTIST

Vedderman really should have gone to the dentist some time before he mentioned the fact that his tooth was Vedderman is six feet one way and correspondingly broad the other and his competitors in business simply lie down and give up the fight if he chooses to make them perform tricks, so of course it would be heresy to say he was a coward. The fact remains that when the first little twinge in the tooth made him sit up and take notice he kept still about it. He had a sneaking hope that it was a false

It was not. Anything cold or any thing hot he learned to eat on the other side of his mouth and occasional moments of forgetfulness brought him starts of retributory anguish. Still, he kept his sorrow to himself. No body knew anything about the disturbed condition of his dental apparatus till the grapefruit at breakfast one morning bit the tender nerve.

"Ouch!" said Vedderman, involuntarily, as he clapped his hand to his

"Why, Henry!" said Mrs. Vedder "You must have a cavity in a tooth! You must go to the dentist!" "I s'pose so," agreed Vedderman, with great reluctance. "I know you dread the dentist," went on his wife, "but-" 'What!" Vedderman exploded, in dignantly. "Whatever put such an idea into your head? I'd just as soon go to the dentist as smoke a cigar! What do you take me for?"

"Well, I'm glad you feel that way about it," said his wife. "You'd better make an appointment today. It doesn't do to let those things run!"

It was three days later that Mrs Vedderman casually inquired about her husband's appointment with the dentist.

"Oh!" said Vedderman, with an elaborate start. "I have been so busy that I've forgotten to run in. My tooth doesn't hurt so much, anyhow."

The next night at dinner Mrs. Vedderman smiled sweetly at her husband. "I called up Dr. Swift today, Henry," she said, "and made an appointment for you next Thursday morning at ten. I thought it would save you the trouble!"

Vedderman put down his napkin and stared at her in a startled way. Then he coughed. "You meant kindly, no doubt, my dear," he told her, but it is just another instance of a woman's interfering in something she knows nothing about! I have a bustness engagement for next Thursday that is extremely important. Kindly phone Dr. Swift and cancel the appointment! I'm just as anxious as you are to get that tooth filled."

"Well, you don't act that way!" said his wife, tartly. Every day thereafter Mrs. Vedder man inquired whether he had seen Dr. Swift, until Vedderman, in sheer self-defense arranged to have his tooth attended to. When he came home to dinner the night of the day he was to have gone to the dentist's his wife beamed cheerfully at him.

"I'm so glad it's all over," she said. "Did he hurt you much?" Vedderman turned his back on her as he hung up his overcoat with extreme care. Then he coughed. "I didn't go to the dentist's today." he said, rapidly. "I had to phone him to set another date. Our eastern man was in town and I had to see him-" "Henry Vedderman!" interrupted his wife, in indignant tones. "I never would have thought it of you! I'm ashamed-

"Look here, Mary!" said her hus band, defiantly, "I don't like the way you treat this affair! You act as though I were postponing it on purpose! You don't think I'm afraid to go to the dentist, do you?" "Oh, no!" said his wife, with sar

"Anyhow," Vedder man said, lamely, "It hasn't hurt nearly so much!"

He bit on an unexpected fragment of bone in the roast that sent him to the ceiling. Mrs. Vedderman merely looked at him, but the look was withering. The constant dull ache got on his temper, too.

Finally, the fourth time he postponed his appointment, Dr. Swift set the hour at 9:00 a. m. and Vedderman saw no hope looming up ahead of him. He ate his breakfast like a condemned criminal and his brow was gloomy.

That night when he got home his wife looked at him inquiringly.

"What do you think!" Vedderman said, in great indignation. "When I got to the dentist's today he wasn't there and the girl said he'd been sudleady called away on important busi-ness! After all the time I've been traing to get at that man it seems he might have had a little consideration for a patient and stay at home and attend to business instead of gallivanting around! It makes me tired! Here I've tried and tried to get work done and sat around and waited and then he runs away as though it didn't matter! Boesn't he think my time is worth anything-" "Henry," interrupted his wife, "as a good, all-around bluffer you are everlastingly beyond the limit! Go up head! You know you're tickled to death to get off again!" "No such thing!" growled Vedder-"Anyhow, he'll be gone only two days and the duffer left an appointment for me for the very first

APPROPRIATE.

The toastmaster didn't have a set list of speeches to announce, so he apportioned the talks among the best speakers present as best he could. He did pretty well, too, until he announced: "The toast 'Our Absent because the back yard is too narrow, Members,' will be responded to by besides there'd be no place to hang Mr. Blank H. Dash." "You must find that newspaper dreadfully interesting!" said Mrs. Alcock resignedly after her husband had been immersed in its pages fifteen minutes or so. "Hugh?" asked Alcock, startled 'Oh," he explained. "I was just reading about that aviation meet. I'd like an airship myself,"

"Why," said Mrs. Alcock, "there'd be just about as much sense in your having an airship as in my insisting ported" are words that carry much on getting that diamond neckince I weight to many minds. It is strange couldn't run an aeroplane if you had > your brains," explained Mrs. Alcock. "It wouldn't take brains especially just to remember what levers to pull and push, but somehow I can't imagine your doing anything like

"Oh, make me out a stick and a coward!" said Alcock, bitterly. "Of course you wouldn't care if I took my life in my hands every time I ascended-you-hadn't thought of that!"

"Well, all I've got to say, Lucius Alcock," said his wife, indignantly, "Is that any man with a family on his hands thinks precious little of his duties and responsibilities when he rushes headlong into idotcally foolish dangers! I'd like to know what Tommy and little Eva and I would do if you got all smashed up cavorting around in the air just for your own selfish pleasure and not giving a thought to those nearest and dearest to you! At least they ought to be dearest, but goodness only knows nowadays what men think, rushing off at every crazy notion!"

"That's always the way!" declared Alcock. "Women are not a bit progressive or interested in their husbands' advancement. All they care about is to have them trot along in the same dull old way, just so they turn in their pay checks at the end of the week! They haven't a thought above groceries and the gas bill!"

"Well, I'd like to hear what you'd say if I tried to feed you on pickled alrahips!" cried his wife. "Or if I ran gasoline through the gas pipes! I guess you'd think groceries and gas were pretty important things after all! You can't make the family's clothes out of airships, either!"

"Clothes!" echoed Alcock. "I suppose clothes are of more importance But on the stage I have submitted than the the progress of the human sen to the iron body-casings of the race! I suppose you'd consider that of civilization than an airship!"

"L don't see why not!" declared those awful stays, and added thick Mrs. Alcock, tapping on the table with brocade dresses with fur sleeves of her thimble. "I don't see why it isn't tremendous weight. But my prefer- just as important for me to keep myself up and look as nice as I can and wear pretty things so the children won't be ashamed of their mother and you won't, either-though goodness knows I might change my dress five times a day and you wouldn't notice

"That necklace wasn't expensive when you consider the clearness of the stones and you can always sell diamonds! I never heard of any one being able to pawn an airship! Why, an airship would be a perfect drug on the market, with no place to keep it, never consent to your taking little Tommy out in it Sunday mornings, so I don't see what good it would do the family, Lucius Alcock!"

"Every bit as much good as your diamond necklace!" said her husband, scathingly. "I couldn't wear it and you couldn't even give it to Tommy to play with, because he might swalbuy an airship to amuse the family!"

"Well, all I've got to say," declared Mrs. Alcock, getting out her handkeron something his family can't enjoy "Well, I should consider myself with him! It's downright selfish, so operly married." he said "if I may it is, and I'd never have thought it of

"It's no more selfish than you and your diamonds!" asserted Alcock sternly. "Of all foolish ideas that's the worst!"

"You never want me to have anything I want!" kept Mrs. Alcock. "You're always down on my buying things that I like," retorted Alcock.

His eye at that instant fell upon the hole in the rug and the scratched wood of the sofs. A slow grin eliminated the flush of indigation on his countenance and he reached over and placed his hand on Mrs. Alcock's little flet that lay clinched on the table.

"Evangeline," he said, in a different tone, "so long as I'm getting only fifteen hundred a year and there are four of us I don't believe we really need to spat over buying airships and diamonds, do we?"

Mrs. Alcock gave a final sniff and then giggled helplessiy. "It is awfully foolish," she said.
